SEVEN ARRESTED IN CLEVELAND FRAUDS; BALLOTS ARE STOLEN

False Registration Is Accused; Police Guard
Booths

CLEVELAND, Nov. 4.—Seven men who are alleged to have made fraudulent registrations, were arrested here today when they attempted to cast their votes in the general election.

The arrests were made in the reputed Republican east side strongholds, the eleventh, twelfth and seventeenth wards, according to police.

The men arrested, police stated, were involved in the registration irregularities which were discovered in a recent investigation of the registration lists by police and members of the board of elections. More than 1,000 instances of irregularities were found, it was reported.

The seven were held at central police station, pending an investigation of their cases by detectives. While police guarded many of the election booths to prevent illegal voting, an intensive search was conducted today for the thieves who last night broke down the doors of the voting place, in the middle of the road, near the home of Harry H. Bales, Hook Road, about 6 o'clock Monday night.

Miss Lena Bales, daughter of Mr. Bales, discovered the body as she was driving along the road and notified her father.

The man was subsequently identified as Charles Thornton, who had been employed to husk corn on the Walter Nash farm, Hook Road. He was returning home from work.

Members of his family told Coroner R. L. Haines, Jamestown, that Thornton had been subject to heart attacks during the last two years. Drs. Paul D. Espey and A. D. DeHaven sought to determine by a post mortem examination Tuesday whether the colored man was suddenly stricken with a heart attack or had been struck and killed by an auto, although the former theory was accepted as the most plausible.

Thornton is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Thornton; three children, Tillis, Anna and Clifford; his aged mother living in Alabama; four brothers, John, Cleveland, Joseph Jerry, James and Albert in Alabama; and three sisters, Mrs. Sarah Johnson, Mrs. Callie Collins and Miss Anna Thornton in Alabama.

He attended the Middle Run Baptist church, where funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Thursday with interment in Cherry Grove Cemetery.

Nurses and attendants hurried to Passelli's room but "The Ape" was no longer a patient. He was slumped over dead on his bed, a bullet from a .38 caliber revolver in the head and another in the neck. He died instantly, a police surgeon said.

Passelli, also known as John Caruso and Jack Tassell, ran into the hospital, a private institution, on Sunday night. He was believed to have just escaped a gangster's ride. He had been seen getting into an automobile a short time before he arrived at the hospital, suffering from a lacerated scalp.

Previously to the night visit of the two gunmen, two men, believed to be the killers, had visited Passelli and talked with him.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Nov. 4.—An alleged suicide attempt of Leslie Lynn, 35-year-old steel worker, failed last night when he fainted just as he was about to shoot himself.

FESS, COOPER SPEAK HERE

OPERA HOUSE RALLY
HERE MONDAY NIGHT

Governor Is Surprise
Speaker; Mrs. Levan
On Program

A surprise visit by Governor Myers Y. Cooper, enroute to his home in Cincinnati after winding up his campaign for re-election with a radio address at Columbus, featured a final mass meeting of Greene County Republicans at the Opera House Monday night, at which a number of distinguished speakers, headed by U. S. Senator S. D. Fess, Yellow Springs, predicted a sweeping Republican victory at the polls Tuesday.

Senator Fess, chairman of the Republican national committee, reiterated a prophecy that Republican dominance in the House and the Senate will not be overthrown. He forecast the re-election of Governor Cooper and was optimistic over the possibility of success for Senator Roscoe C. McCulloch.

Following his custom of terminating every campaign by addressing a home county audience on election eve, the senior Ohio senator delivered the principal address, touching upon every paramount issue of the campaign and reciting accomplishments of the administration, state and national.

"We never have any apology to make in speaking of the record of the Republican party," he declared. "The Democrats have been out of power so much of the time about all they can do in framing up a platform is to see what the Republicans have done and then draw up campaign issues in direct opposition."

Asserting the present period of depression is not confined to this country but is world wide in scope, the senator said "there isn't a man with a thimble full of brains who would be bold enough to attribute to President Hoover or the Republican administration a depression which covers the entire world like an eclipse."

Defending President Hoover, Senator Fess said, "the man they're trying to minimize is the same man they tried to persuade to run for President on their own ticket in 1920."

Enunciating the fundamental principles on which the Republican party is based, the senator spoke at length on the tariff issue, declaring the competitive tariff proposed by the Democrats won't do "because it would permit Europe to compete with America. That is what we will never permit. She would drive us out of existence."

Governor Cooper arrived from Columbus about 10:15 o'clock as the rally was nearing a close, and despite the fact he had already made ten speeches Monday, consented to address the local rally, marking the first time he had spoken in Greene County during the campaign.

Expressing his appreciation for the loyalty of Greene Countyans in supporting his candidacy, the chief executive also summed up issue of the current campaign.

Other speakers on the program included Dr. W. R. McChesney, president of Cedarville College; chairman of the meeting; Mrs. Wilma Sinclair LeVan, Steubenville, Republican national committee woman in from Ohio; and Miss Hallie Q. Brown, Wilberforce, nationally known colored speaker.

Miss Brown declared that "to be a Republican is the highest honor in the political world." She asserted Ohio is standing on the threshold of a volcano and that the electorate should be aroused to a sense of its duty in electing the Republican ticket from top to bottom Tuesday.

"If the eyes of the nation are on Ohio Tuesday, then the eyes of Ohio are on the great Seventh Congressional District, wherein lies the greatest Republican vote in the state," Mrs. LeVan declared following Miss Brown. Women, she said, are becoming more and more interested in politics because "politics begin in the home."

The closing Republican rally was attended by an overflow crowd.

Capone offered to cease his labor racketeering, surrender on a vagrancy warrant and leave Chicago to operate his remaining interests by remote control if the authorities will agree not to interfere with his liquor business and dismiss the vagrancy charges as soon as he surrenders.

This offer was made to several high officials and turned down. Chief Justice John P. McGoorty, in his charge to the November grand jury, made first public announcement of the gangster's overtures, warning the jury of the spreading power of Capone's domination.

"His most formidable competitors have been ruthlessly exterminated and his only apparent obstacle toward undisputed sway is the law," Judge McGoorty told the jurors.

The woman was rushed to a hospital, where it was said she appeared to have suffered a skull fracture. Detectives waited at her bedside to question her.

The couple registered at the hotel Sunday night.

NATION TO EXPRESS OPINION AT POLLS; ISSUES IMPORTANT

Verdict Rests With Voters; Predict Party
Bolting

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—The evidence in the argument closed, the case of Republican versus Democrat went to the jury of the American electorate today.

Upon the verdict rendered hinges the prestige of the Hoover administration, the make-up of the seventy-second congress, the complexion of state governments in thirty-four states, the fate of thousands of aspirants for smaller offices, and how light upon the growing anti-prohibition sentiment which has been so pronounced since 1928.

And, significantly enough, the decision may have a vital bearing on the important presidential campaign two years hence, for candidates are involved today that are bound to affect the battle in 1932.

Probably close to 25,000,000 voters will participate in today's decision. Scattered through forty-seven states, in cities, towns and farms, the record disclosed by the ballot boxes tonight will afford an illuminating insight into a cross-section of American opinion.

That sweeping Democratic gains will be registered in all parts of the country is conceded. The Republicans admit it rather gloomily; the Democrats boast of it. The principal question is the extent of the sweep. The Republicans hope to check it just short of giving the Democrats control of the next senate and house. They are confident of keeping the senate. Of the house they are not so certain; in fact, some Republican leaders expect to lose it.

The Democrats went to the polls today talking of landslides. It is obvious that if anything approaching a landslide develops the Democrats will take the house, probably the senate, and confront President Hoover during the last two years of his term with a congress independent of his administration and his desires. But the Republicans say this just cannot be. The ballot boxes hold the answer.

An off-year election is always baffling to the politicians. This year it is triply so, for in addition to the normal complexities there is now a severe business depression, widespread unemployment, prohibition in many states.

Party bolting such as the country has seldom witnessed is the determining factor in several states. In New York, the Republican dries have left the party and set up an independent candidate for governor. In Illinois, the Republican dries have also bolted the ticket; while in retributed Republican Pennsylvania it is the Republican wets who have deserted the state ticket by the hundreds of thousands.

And even more important, probably, than the bitter issue of prohibition is the state of the economic times—"hard times," according to the Democratic version.

In similar situations in American political history, the electorate has always turned savagely upon the party in power as the only means of expressing its resentment and its dissatisfaction. If history repeats, as the Democrats assert it will, today may witness one of the most violent turn-over in recent years.

The Republicans contend, however that times have changed since the "panics" of other days. Certainly the Republicans have left no stone unturned to convince the country that they are in no wise responsible for business conditions.

The prisoner refused to discuss the incident and police are without clues to the identity of his three accomplices who escaped.

Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham had returned home in their auto about 10:30 p. m., when the attempted hold-up took place. Mrs. Cunningham had started for the house but her husband was still in the machine when two youths, who were standing in the shadow of a tree across the street, and two others who were crawling along the alley, closed in on the car and demanded Cunningham to get out.

Cunningham refused to obey the order and as the youths became more and more menacing, Mrs. Cunningham took command of the situation, phoned police and came to the rescue with the poker.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 4.—A city-wide search was conducted by police today for two youthful robbers who staged a daring holdup of the ticket office at the University Theatre here last night.

Thrusting a revolver through the window, in the face of the cashier, the youths obtained a lot of $125 in cash and hurried away through the crowds passing on the street.

Frightens Quartet With Poker; Police Make
One Arrest

Mrs. Margaret L. Cunningham, wife of Thomas A. Cunningham, 329 Washington, state highway department employe, has the ancient art of bluffing down to a fine point.

Instead of being frightened when four youths waylaid and attempted to hold up her husband in his auto in an alley near their residence Monday night, Mrs. Cunningham rushed inside the house, notified police and then, arming herself with a poker, returned to the defense of her husband, who was being menaced by a quartet of young assailants.

Mrs. Cunningham brandished the poker in such a threatening manner the four youths fled to a safe distance and began throwing stones at the machine.

Shortly afterward police appeared on the scene and saw three of the youths attacking their fourth companion with what was apparently a blackjack.

Police gave chase along Kennedy St., but the three would-be hold-up men leaving one of their number insensible on the ground, managed to escape, ignoring four shots fired in their direction.

Police captured the youth left lying on the ground. He proved to be Harold Jenks, Towler Road, who was badly beaten about the head and face. Jenks was taken to police headquarters where Dr. R. R. McClellan treated his injuries.

The prisoner refused to discuss the incident and police are without clues to the identity of his three accomplices who escaped.

EXPECT 2,000,000 WILL CAST BALLOTS IN IMPORTANT RACE

Fair Weather Helps;
Hard Times Chief Issue At Stake

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 4.—Ohio voters today went to the polls some 2,000,000 strong, according to early estimates, to iron out a highly significant "off" year political situation, topsy-turvyed by a campaign of strange developments and new and baffling alignments.

And while the state's electorate "X-ed" its decision on the tell-tale ballots, the political pulses of the candidates, who for weeks have "stumped" their way up and down, across and back again the state, beating tom-toms of "hard-times," prohibition, tariff, and attacking each other's administrations, were beating high.

Election day broke "fair and warmer" today—undoubtedly an attraction to the voting populace of the state to go to the polls.

The electors are deciding whether United States Senator Roscoe C. McCulloch, Republican "bone dry," shall retain the senatorial toga or whether it shall be transferred to the shoulders of former Congressman Robert J. Bulkley, "dripping wet" Democrat.

Decision is also being registered on the question whether former Congressman George White, Democrat of Marietta, shall be installed early next January as Ohio's chief executive for a "new deal" in the state's administration, or whether Governor Myers Y. Cooper, Republican, is to serve a second term and finish what he has started.

State officers being chosen today include those of lieutenant governor, secretary of state, attorney general, state treasurer, members of the Ohio senate and the house of representatives. Two members of the Ohio Supreme Court, one Appellate Court judge in each of the nine districts of the state, and Common Pleas judges in the various counties are also being elected.

County offices at stake today comprise commissioners, auditor, prosecutor, sheriff, recorder, treasurer and coroner.

The ballots also submit to the voters a proposal that the state constitution be amended to permit counties and school districts to share in the distribution of the state income and inheritance taxes.

Viewing the whole political situation in the state, political experts believe that one factor or is has been dominant in making up the minds of the voters. It is the issue of hard times.

If Ohio, a normally Republican state, is swept into a Democratic administration—and there is more than a fair chance, according to the belief of many—it will be because of an "economic protest vote."

The issue of prohibition is centered in the bitter senatorial contest between Bulkley and McCulloch. Should Bulkley, the Democrat, emerge victorious, political experts say, it will not have been due to his wet platform, but because he is on a ticket which stands for a "new deal" promising an effort to bring back better times.

In the event of the re-election of Governor Cooper, he will be the first republican state executive to be re-elected since the late Governor George K. Nash was elected to succeed himself in 1920.

The election situation with regard to the national house of representatives is doubtful. Ohio's present delegation consists of nineteen Republicans and three Democrats. Both Democrats and Republicans predict a victory today.

The Democrats claim a majority of the twenty-two congressmen, while the Republicans declare that not more than one or two Democratic congressional candidates will be elected.

SEVEN ARRESTED IN CLEVELAND FRAUDS; BALLOTS ARE STOLEN

False Registration Is Accused; Police Guard Booths

CLEVELAND, Nov. 4.—Seven men who are alleged to have made fraudulent registrations, were arrested here today when they attempted to cast their votes in the general election.

The arrests were made in the reputed Republican east side strongholds, the eleventh, twelfth and seventeenth wards, according to police.

The men arrested, police stated, were involved in the registration irregularities which were discovered in a recent investigation of the registration lists by police and members of the board of elections. More than 1,000 instances of irregularities were found, it is reported.

The seven were held at central police station, pending an investigation of their cases by detectives.

While police guarded many of the election booths to prevent illegal voting, an intensive search was conducted today for the thieves who last night broke down the doors of the voting place of the twenty-seventh ward, precinct J, and stole hundreds of official ballots.

The looting of the polling place was not discovered until Max Rosenblum, presiding judge, opened the booth for the casting of ballots.

Scores of persons were compelled to wait until additional ballots were brought from the board of elections headquarters before they could vote.

BEER RACKETEER IS SLAIN IN HOSPITAL BY EASTERN GUNMEN

Desperados Invade Private Room To Slay Gangster

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 4.—Boldness of warring eastern gunmen reached a new height today with the shooting to death of Jack Passelli, a beer racketeer known as "The Ape," in Newark General Hospital.

While doctors and nurses tried to administer to the wishes of patients, two gunmen invaded the hospital last night and seeking out Passelli from the 150 beds went to his private room, fired two shots, and then calmly walked out.

Nurses and attendants hurried to Passelli's room but "The Ape" was no longer a patient. He was slumped over dead on his bed, a bullet from a .38 caliber revolver in the head and another in the neck. He died instantly, a police surgeon said.

Passelli, also known as John Caruso and Jack Tassell, ran into the hospital, a private institution, on Sunday night. He was believed to have just escaped a gangster's ride. He had been seen getting into an automobile a short time before he arrived at the hospital, suffering from a lacerated scalp.

Previously to the night visit of the two gunmen, two men, believed to be the killers, had visited Passelli and talked with him.

CAPONE WOULD MAKE HIS PEACE

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—Al Brown, otherwise known as "Scarface" Al Capone, overlord of Chicago's racketeering and liquor interests, has offered to compromise with the law, it was ascertained today as details of the "deal" were made public.

Capone offered to cease his labor racketeering, surrender on a vagrancy warrant and leave Chicago to operate his remaining interests by remote control if the authorities will agree not to interfere with his liquor business and dismiss the vagrancy charges as soon as he surrenders.

This offer was made to several high officials and turned down. Chief Justice John P. McGorty, in his charge to the November grand jury, made first public announcement of the gangster's overtures, warning the jurymen of the spreading power of Capone's domination.

YOUTH ADMITS MURDER OF TWO

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—Edward Kotowski, a mild-spoken youth of 20, today confessed the murder of two gangsters who, he said, tried to compel him to remain in a drinking party.

The bodies, identified as those of William Sierza and Frank Zumbro, were found in Sierza's beer flat Sunday morning. Police at that time were of the opinion that the two men were slain by rivals in the liquor racket.

Kotowski gave himself up to police, saying he could remain silent about the double murder no longer. He said he had known the pair for some time and Saturday night joined them in a drinking party.

An altercation arose when they tried to compel him to get drunk, he said. Sierza drew a pistol and fired at him whereupon the youth took the weapon away from him and shot both men as they tried to overpower him.

Mrs. Margaret L. Cunningham, wife of Thomas A. Cunningham, 329 Washington, state highway department employe, has the ancient art of bluffing down to a fine point.

Instead of being frightened when four youths waylaid and attempted to hold up her husband in his auto in an alley near their residence Monday night, Mrs. Cunningham rushed inside the house, notified police and then, arming herself with a poker, returned to the defense of her husband, who was being menaced by a quartet of young assailants.

Mrs. Cunningham brandished the poker in such a threatening manner the four youths fled to a safe distance and began throwing stones at the machine.

Shortly afterward police appeared on the scene and saw three of the youths attacking their fourth companion with what was apparently a blackjack.

Police gave chase along Kennedy St., but the three would be hold-up men leaving one of their number senseless on the ground, managed to escape, ignoring four shots fired in their direction.

Police captured the youth left lying on the ground. He proved to be Harold Jenks, Towler Road, who was badly beaten about the head and face. Jenks was taken to police headquarters where Dr. R. R. McClellan treated his injuries.

The prisoner refused to discuss the incident and police are without clues to the identity of his three accomplices who escaped.

Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham had returned home in their auto about 10:30 p. m., when the attempted hold-up took place. Mrs. Cunningham had started for the house but her husband was still in the machine when two youths, who were standing in the shadow of a tree across the street, and two others who were crawling along the alley, closed in on the car and demanded Cunningham to get out.

Cunningham refused to obey the order and as the youths became more and more menacing, Mrs. Cunningham took command of the situation, phoned police and came to the rescue with the poker.

COUPLE FOUND DEAD IN HOTEL

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—A man believed to have been James Hester, 50, of Toledo, O., was found dead with his throat slashed, and a woman believed to be his wife was found dead to unconsciousness in their room at the Palmer House today.

Police advanced the theory that Hester beat his wife with a table lamp and then committed suicide. The Palmer House is one of Chicago's most exclusive hotels.

The woman was rushed to a hospital, where it was said she appeared to have suffered a skull fracture. Detectives waited at her bedside to question her.

The couple registered at the hotel Sunday night.

TWO BANDITS LOOT THEATER BOX OFFICE

CLEVELAND, Nov. 4.—A city-wide search was conducted by police today for two youthful robbers who staged a daring holdup of the ticket office at the University Theatre here last night.

Thrusting a revolver through the window, in the face of the cashier, the youths obtained a loot of $125 in cash and hurried away through the crowds passing on the street.

CLERICAL AND LAY DELEGATES PLAN TO ATTEND SYNOD MEET

Clerical and lay delegates from more than 300 Lutheran churches in Ohio and northern Kentucky will attend the tenth annual convention of the Synod of Ohio of the United Lutheran Church in America, when it meets in Springfield beginning Tuesday evening. Springfield Lutheran Church, together with Wittenberg College and the Oesterlen Home, will be the hosts for the four day session.

The opening meeting will be held in the First Lutheran Church Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. with the administration of the Holy Communion, and a sermon by Rev. Charles D. Besch, D. D., Canton.

Business sessions of the convention will begin at 9 o'clock in the morning at the Wittenberg campus, Wednesday at 7:30 p. m. At that time Rev. Dr. Abdel Ross Wentz, of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Gettysburg, Pa., will be the principal speaker. Dr. A. H. Smith, Ashland, will speak in behalf of the historical phase of the merger of the Ohio Synod. Music will be furnished by the Wittenberg Choir of more than seventy-five voices.

Harold K. Snyder, and Harry M. Fudge, both councilmen of the First Lutheran Church of Xenia, will represent the local congregation. They were elected at a special congregational meeting Sunday morning after the regular church services. The Rev. Adrian G. Lebold, pastor of the local Lutheran congregation will be the clerical representative.

Adjournment of the Ohio Synod convention will be on Thursday night following the ordination service. This service is of importance because of its impressiveness and because it is only held on this annual Synodical occasion.

Many persons from Xenia are planning to attend the evening meetings in connection with the regular dispensation of the church's business.

SALE OF CHRISTMAS SEALS STARTS HERE NOVEMBER 28, SAID

Jolly old Santa himself waves a greeting from the 1930 Christmas health seal. Bearing the inscription "Merry Christmas, Health To All," seventy-five million of these tiny health stickers are being distributed throughout the state by the Ohio Public Health Association in preparation for the twenty-fourth annual seal sale which opens November 28 and closes December 24.

The sale of Christmas health seals is put on each year by local affiliated public health leagues in every county of the state as a part of a nation-wide fight against tuberculosis.

The fact that this fight can not be won until the disease is entirely eradicated is being stressed by John W. Bricker, Columbus, chairman of the Ohio Christmas Health Seal Committee. This committee which hopes to raise $400,000 for tuberculosis prevention and control work in 1931, is composed of presidents of fourteen state-wide organizations interested in health.

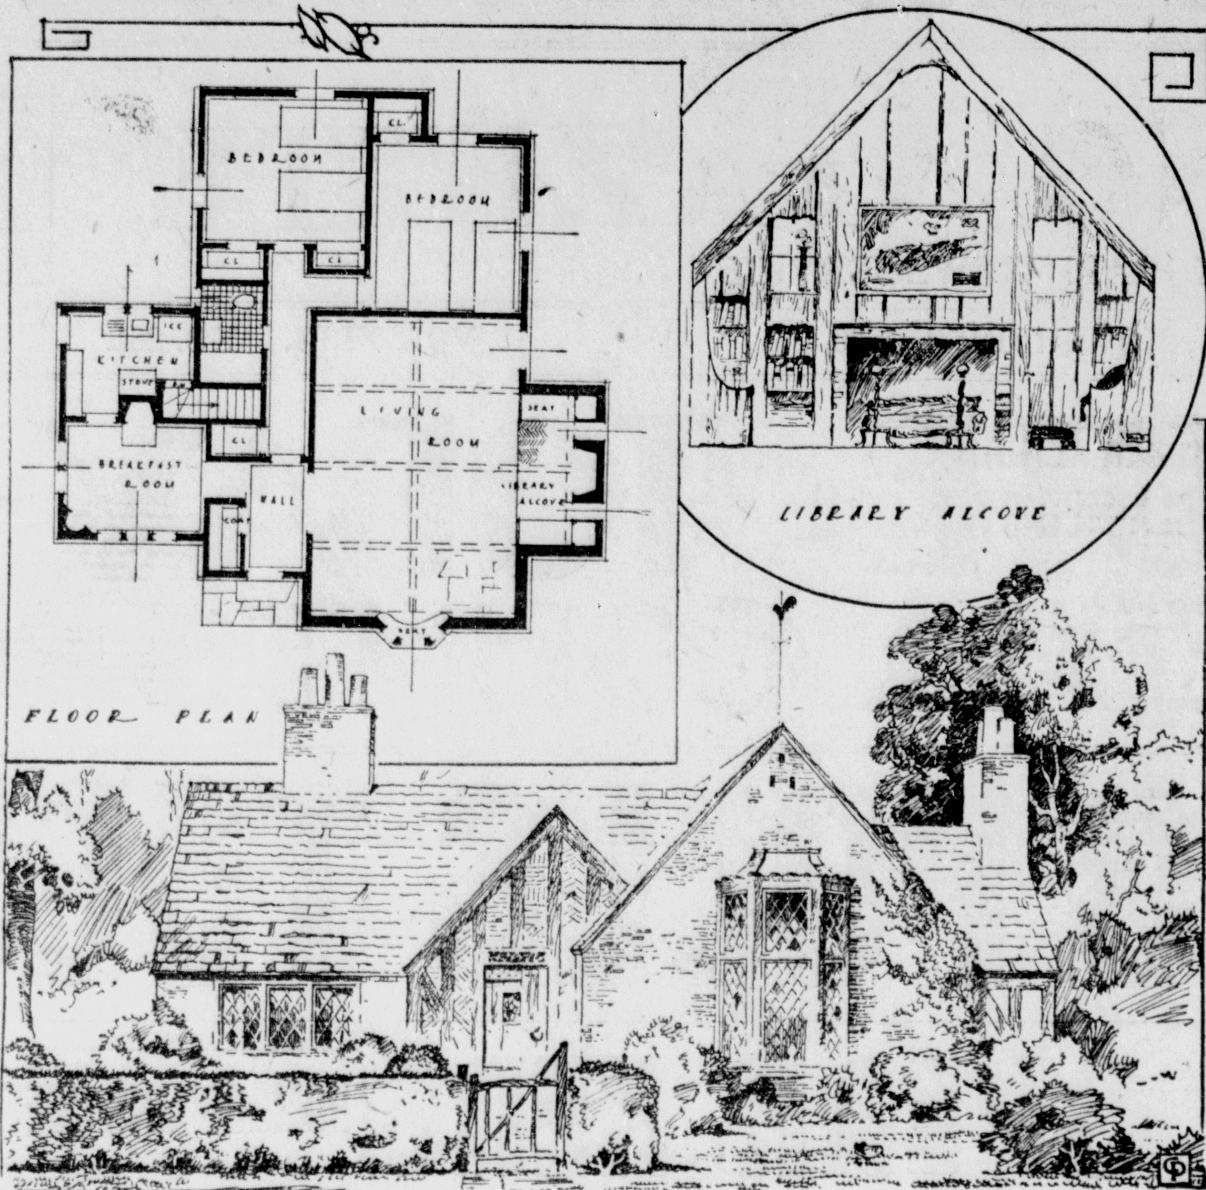

"Through the tuberculosis death rate has been halved during the victorious advance of preventive measures during the past few decades, it is still the greatest single cause of death among young Americans between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five," says Mr. Bricker. "As citizens of Ohio, interested in the health and welfare of the state, we should consider it a privilege to give our wholehearted and generous support to the sale of the Christmas health seal."

FINANCE AIDS MODERNIZATION

With the retail lumber dealers of Xenia armed with hundreds of specially developed home modernizing ideas for use here, and with a finance plan that makes it possible for any home owner to modernize his dwelling and pay for the improvements monthly, Xenia is facing an era of increased home repairing and remodeling.

By home modernizing is meant the addition of any accessory to a home that brings it more up to date.

There are thousands of ways in which homes might be modernized. The addition of a picture, a mirror, a new light bracket, is a form of modernizing, or modernization may mean the entire rebuilding of a house in style that conforms with the architecture of today.

To help residents of Xenia appreciate what it means to them in dollars and cents to remodel their homes, not to mention added comforts and conveniences, is one of the objectives of the local retail lumber dealer in sponsoring a home modernizing campaign here.

The value of property is often increased enormously by the addition of a few little improvements here and there that lend distinction to the property and give it individuality.

A complete home modernizing program need not be undertaken all in just one year. The most essential changes can be made at once and paid for on a monthly basis so the payments will scarcely be missed. Then when another season rolls around, other desired features can be added and paid for in the same way. Thus within a comparatively short time it is not only possible to completely modernize an old fashioned house, but it is possible to attain this worthy objective without any appreciable financial sacrifice.

The battle cry of the home owner today is modernization, and Xenia retail lumber dealers are completely armed with ideas and suggestions to assist in the cause. Any owner who is entertaining even a remote hope of undertaking modernizing work this season is invited to get in touch with Xenia's retail lumber dealer. His experience and his assistance are freely available without cost and without obligation whether the improvements under consideration involve the expenditure of just a few dollars or several thousand.

no very great cost. It was designed by Theodore Whitehead Davis, of New York, who suggests that the brick walls be whitewashed, and that the roof be blended gray and russet tones. Half timbering is used on the entrance gable and the library alcove wing. The latter has stucco between the half timbering.

In this charming cottage the living room runs through to the roof rafters. The beams in the ceiling of this room show the plan. Two bedrooms in the rear are cut off from the living room by a small hallway, which also gives access to the bathroom. Each bedroom has two exposures. The kitchen is well placed, and the cellar stairs lead out of it. The breakfast room, which adjoins the kitchen, has a good-sized fireplace and a corner cupboard.

A feature of the living room is a library alcove, which is planned around the big fireplace. A view of this alcove is also shown, in which one can see the book selves and cupboards on either side of the fireplace, above which are two small windows. There are built-in seats at either side of the alcove. Above the simple fireplace the architect has drawn a framed map.

Mr. Davis gives the cubical contents of this bungalow as 21,694 cubic feet. Where the cost of construction is 50 cents a cubic foot, such a house would cost $10,847. An architectural critic says that in the last hundred and fifty years "manufacturing has step by step taken the place of art of building." He means that the products of factories such as stoves, window sash, flooring, etc., have more or less determined the practices of the architect. A corollary to this is the fact that modern manufacturers have returned to the architect much more than they have taken away. There are certain products, such as special types of roofing slates, tiles, and bricks manufactured in quantity, which are much more beautiful than any similar product ever made by the hand of man. Therefore, while the architect, if he would keep within a set price, must specify stock materials, this does not in all cases mean that he must accept inferior quality.

SETTLE $50,000 DAMAGE SUIT HERE

A compromise settlement in favor of the plaintiff out of court for an amount which, by mutual agreement of the parties concerned, was not divulged, terminated the $50,000 damage suit instituted by Mrs. Eleanor M. Kingsbury, widow and executrix of the estate of Robert H. Kingsbury, deceased, against Richard Jones, 18, Osborn, before a jury could be impaneled to try the case in Common Pleas Court Monday. An insurance company made the settlement, it was announced.

The damage action was an outgrowth of the death of Mr. Kingsbury, widely known Xenia clothing merchant, who was fatally injured in an auto collision last March 14. The Osborn youth was the driver of the car which collided with the Kingsbury machine at a road intersection.

The annual library carnival was held on Dayton St. Friday evening. The carnival opened with a chicken dinner at the Methodist Church where the ladies served two hundred and fifty people. There were two parades, the first began at 7:20 when the children marched to music furnished by the Antioch Orchestra. The adults began their march at 8 o'clock after the judges awarded the prizes the crowd separated, some going into the Opera House where they had dancing and others attended the two plays, "Harlequin's Return" and "One, Two, Three," given under the direction of Miss Katherine Fittz. The Carnival was a success in every way. Everyone had a good time, good eats and the ladies are very well pleased with the receipts. Children's games were played and prizes awarded. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served to thirty little friends who were present.

The married ladies of St. Paul's Church will give a party in the church parlors Wednesday evening at 8:30. Bridge, euchre and five hundred will be played. All are welcome.

MELLON'S SIMILE

Secretary Mellon could have enlarged upon his simile of this nation as a ship riding out a storm of depression, with Captain Hoover at the helm, without impairing either its rhetorical or political effect. A captain can't bring his vessel into port single-handed. A good deal depends on the crew that its owners give him to work with. The crew in this case is Congress.

The ship is strong. The worm and canker of defeatism has not eaten deep into her timbers. She has ridden out other storms, when the waves of world-wide depression buffeted her as they are doing today. She will ride out this one. The only question is this: Shall she be condemned to drift with the sea, while an unfriendly and mutinous crew wrangles with the captain over the course to be laid; or shall her arrival in the port of economic recovery be hastened by signing on a crew that will work sympathetically with the man at the wheel?

The people, who own this ship we call the United States, are asking that question at the polls today. Will they give Captain Hoover a crew in the engine room of congress, which will do its best to keep the boilers of employment cold until after the presidential contest of 1932; or will they give him a crew that will respond instantly to the signal for full steam ahead?

This is no time for a partisan division of authority in Washington, as Secretary Mellon points out. This is no time to talk of punishing an administration for an economic debacle for which it was not responsible, as Al Smith frankly admitted in his radio speech recently. A condition confronts the country.

At the head of the government we have, and for the next two years shall have, a man who has proved himself competent not only to steer the country through prosperity; but to do it well inside the best time made by any predecessor under similar circumstances, if his policies are not obstructed by partisan foes. The country must pick the crew which is to help him.

GUESSING CONTEST

When he named the 64 men he regards as "ruling" the United States, James W. Gerard started something as entertaining as tree sitting. All shapes and kinds of men and women have suddenly become listers or listees of greatness. Congressman LaGuardia claims that the "best minds" of the Republican party are convinced of the failure of prohibition and he publishes a list of 25 of the very best of them. A newspaper alliance has induced Ida M. Tarbell, who might well have included herself in the number, to select the 50 foremost living American women.

Canada has caught the infection. The Montreal Herald finds that 2 men rule Canada about as much as Gerard's 64 rule the United States and names them. Guessing at the great has trapped even George Bernard Shaw. The other night he counted off all the universe makers the last 2,500 years has produced on his fingers—and found that he had two fingers left for himself, a modest reservation under the circumstances.

Our reaction to all this is to applaud Douglas Fairbanks' observation that Shaw might have allocated at least one of his two spare fingers to Thomas A. Edison. "If it were not for Edison," said Doug, "I would be out of a job." That is the real test of greatness in the eyes of 99.44 per cent of the people in a world in which the biggest job is getting a living. The man who created jobs for movie actors and entertainment for movie fans is to millions of men, women and children a greater benefactor than Aristotle, Copernicus or Galileo, whose backers are numerically comparatively negligible.

Guessing at the great would be a more useful game if it were surrounded with Queensberry rules. At least some universal standard of comparison should be set up. As long as this free lance guessing goes on unbiased eyes will continue to be offended by selections obviously fathered by racial or personal prejudices. Al Capone will be listed by some among the de facto rulers of the country. Others will boost for the author of the prohibition amendment. The only advantage of the present free-for-all is that it permits every man to feel that the woman he loves is the foremost woman in America, a sentiment she reciprocates by calling him the most wonderful man in the world.

ALL of US

WE MUST PAY OUR WAY

You know the lad who always, somehow, manages to let you pay his street car fare? He seems to be trying to get to the cashbox first, but he never wins the race. It's always your money and not his that pays the fare. And after a while you begin to wonder if he isn't one of those fellows who never Pay Their Way—and you don't like him as much as you did. He saves a few cents and loses your respect.

You know the acquaintance who never gets the dinner check? You get it, and he says he'll pay next time, but he never does. He's saving his money for something else and every dinner that somebody else pays for is so much more money in his bank account. . . . He's getting ahead, but he's not Paying His Way. He saves a dollar and loses your friendliness.

You know the people who whimper about life and shrink from its responsibilities—and let them fall onto the shoulders of those who are nearest and ought to be dearest to them. Again, those people are failing to Pay Their Way. They save themselves trouble and suffering, but they lose their OWN Self-Respect.

None of these people Pay Their Way. None of them seem to understand that one of the greatest sources of happiness in life is to feel an obligation toward other people and to pay that debt. The Little Men do not know that, but the Big Men do, and lately I learned something about one Great Man that made me warm to him as if I'd found a friend.

The man is Albert Einstein. We have all heard about that man. We've heard his name frequently enough these last few years, even though we do not understand those complicated mathematical formulae that he works out in his subtle brain and sets on paper. He is famous and he may be famous as long as Human History is being made. . . . We could forgive him for being proud and arrogant.

But just last week I learned that Albert Einstein is not proud but HUMBLE. I read something by him that made me understand how simple and kind the man really is. In two pages in a magazine he picked the truth about himself. He said there is just one thing in life that all of us know! we are here on earth for other men and women, for those who are closest to us and for those, also, whom we will never see. Frequently every day Albert Einstein realizes how much his entire life, within and without, is dependent on the labor of other people, living and dead, and he tells himself again and again how hard he must work in his short visit to this earth to repay a little of his debt to human beings. And very often, he said, he is made unhappy by the fear that he has taken too much from other men and will NEVER be able to pay back what he has borrowed.

Do you feel humble in the presence of this great man, so soberly confessing a fear that he has not Paid His Way? Though all his mathematical theories may prove false, though all his fame be fleeting, by that great confession alone he Pays His Way and makes the rest of us ashamed.

Dixie Land

Where did the phrase "Dixie Land" originate?

The derivation of the phrase "Dixie Land" is obscure. It is said to have originated in New York, where a certain Dixie owned a large number of slaves. When these slaves were obliged to migrate to the south, they grew to look upon their old home as a sort of paradise, which they celebrated in their songs. In time the term "Dixie Land" was transferred to their new homes and became a name for the south among the whites as well as the negroes. The term "Dixie Land" is also popularly connected with Mason and Dixon's line—the line of division between the free and slave states.

Bo-Broadway

—By JOSEPH VAN RAALTE—

NEW YORK.—If you travel long enough in Tammany Town, and in a manner sufficiently discriminating, sooner or later you encounter every phase of human activity.

I journeyed across to the fringe of Maada Lane last week to visit an aging thespian. In the "front parlor" of the theatrical boarding house I encountered a gentleman nearly nine feet tall. In the course of conversation he informed me that he is a "retired" circus giant.

IDLE ALL

Knocking around New York every day you marvel, after a while, at the army of well-dressed men and women who aren't "goin' nowhere."

You encounter them smoking, all afternoon in Broadway coffee houses, looking dreamily out at the rain, window-shopping on the sunny side of The Avenue on cool mornings, or seated comfortably in the movie or vaudeville theatres, with nothing on their minds worth mentioning. How most of them live is a puzzle. What endeavor, mental or physical, they translate into coin, is a mystery.

OLD TIMERS

They couldn't get the handouts off an actor in one of the Broadway crook shows the other night and someone suggested that he go around to the police station.

Three newspaper men there whose aggregate experience amounted to something like seventy years, puffed casually at their camels' hair cigarettes, calm and detached as so many stuffed weasels. Far be it from them to interfere with a press agent's stunt.

And said the publicity man of the show: "That's the worst of being so confoundingly hand-buffed. If I had framed that thing as a press yarn it would have appeared in every sheet in town, but because it wasn't a fake—because it lacked the brass-bound compactness that characterizes most fabricated theatrical

THE BOYS STOOD ON THE BURNING DECK!

Stewart Outlines Brief Analysis of Senatorial Fight in Each State, Suggesting Most Likely Outcome

WASHINGTON.—Generally speaking the states (approximately one-third of the entire 48) where senators are to be chosen November 4 are the objects of national politicians' keenest attention.

In a few, however, gubernatorial fights overshadow senate contests. Regarded as a wholesale proposition, nothing overshadows in importance the struggles for control of the next house of representatives, but with nearly 1,000 candidates in the field (counting independents), it is not yet possible even for experts to consider the situation in much detail.

A once-over of debatable states suggests the following conclusions: ALABAMA—Prospects better than 50-50 for Bankhead (Dem.) for senate, but Heflin (Ind.) still formidable, otherwise Democratic, as usual.

ARIZONA—No senate contest. ARKANSAS—For senate Robinson (Dem.) unopposed since withdrawal of Greathouse (Ind.). Otherwise solidly Democratic.

CALIFORNIA—No senate contest.

COLORADO—For senate, race close between Shaw (Rep.) and Costigan (Dem.) with advantage perhaps slightly in former's favor, though rather because of state's normal Republicanism than from any indications apparent in present fight, which looks nip-and-tuck on its individual merits. Democrats also hopeful of annexing a Denver representative seat.

CONNECTICUT—No senate contest. Otherwise Republican, as usual.

DELAWARE—About 50-50 between Hastings (Rep.) and Bayard (Dem.) for senate. Representative-at-large seat also hotly contested.

FLORIDA—No senate contest. Representationally all Democratic.

IDaho—Borah (Rep.) considered as good as re-elected senator.

GEORGIA—Harris (Dem.) unopposed for senate. Ditto all Democratic candidates for representatives' seats.

Democrats Hopeful ILLINOIS—Except for an appalling normal Republican majority to overcome edge apparently with Lewis (Dem.) for senate against Mrs. McCormick (Rep.), with Mrs. O'Neill (Ind.) impossible of election, but promising to draw heavily from McCormick vote. Democrats hopeful of gains in various congressional districts.

INDIANA—No senate contest.

Stories, the sophisticated scribes in the back room of the police station rejected it.

"Your good reporter never outgrows the age of astonishment. He is seldom fooled because he refuses to be duped by his fear of being duped. There is no boob on earth like the half-wize sap!"

All of which may be true, nevertheless, I vote along with The Boys in the Back Room.

"DE LAWD'S" MISTAKE

Richard Harrison who plays "De Lawd" in "The Green Pastures" voices the belief that Marc Connelly, its author, is entitled to full credit for the success of the play. He doesn't give a look-in to Roark Bradford, whose book, "Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillum," Connelly dramatized.

"There's a deep religious spirit to the play," says Harrison, "that you won't find in the Bradford book."

I hat to take issue with "De Lawd" in a matter of this kind; but I'm afraid Brother Harrison hasn't read "Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillum" with a sympathetic and discerning eye.

Democrats hopeful and Republicans fearful (though not officially admitted so) of gains by former in several congressional districts.

IOWA—Dickinson (Rep.) generally considered certain to win over Steck (Dem.), a gain of a senate seat for Republicans. Otherwise solidly Republican.

KANSAS—Two senate contests: Allen (Rep.) versus McGill (Dem.) and Perkins (Rep.) for short term, and Capper (Rep.) versus Davis (Dem.) for regular six-year term. Victory of Allen and Capper considered foregone conclusion.

KENTUCKY—Anyone's fight between Robison (Rep.) and Williamson and Logan (both Dem.), respectively for short and long terms, as senate candidates. Democrats hopeful of several representative gains.

LOUISIANA—Long (Dem.) unopposed for senate. Democratic nominees as representatives difficult.

MAINE—White (Rep.) elected senator September 8. Representatives' delegation solidly Republican.

MARYLAND—No senate contest. Gubernatorial fight of more than average consequence because of Democratic candidate, Ritchie's, presidential possibilities. Gubernatorial chances deemed strongly favorable to him over Broening (Rep.). Democrats hopeful of gaining a congressional district or two.

MASSACHUSETTS—Battle

Massachusetts' Senatorial elections seemingly favorable to Coolidge (Dem. vet) over Butler (Rep. dry) because of state's presumable wet preference. Labor's open opposition to Butler and unemployment issue, however, counterweight.

Contravise gubernatorial advantage seemingly is with Aldrich (Rep.) against Ely (Dem.) Democrats hopeful of some representative gains, but, conversely, are threatened with loss of at least one district they now hold—Calvin Coolidge's.

MICHIGAN—Senatorially Couzens (Rep.) undoubtedly already the equivalent of re-elected.

MINNESOTA—Senatorial advantage somewhat with Schall (Rep.), but Hoidale (Dem.) fighting furiously. Lundeen (F. L.) unlikely of election, but strong minority vote important to his party to prevent threatened evaporation of its state organization. Representative prospects much chopped up among Republicans, Democrats and Farmer-Laborites.

MISSISSIPPI—Pat Harrison (Dem.) unopposed for senate. Ditto all Democratic nominees as representatives.

MISSOURI—No senate contest. Democrats hopeful of gaining several representatives.

MONTANA—Nip-and-tuck fight between Walsh (Dem.), a strong candidate but in danger, many think, by reason of his Republican opponent, Galen's, wetness, in a state wet enough to have replaced its baby Volstead act.

NEBRASKA—Norris (very progressive Rep.) generally considered safe against Hitchcock (Dem.), but still bitterly fought by conservative element in both major parties.

NEVADA—No senate contest.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Wide margin in favor of Keyes (Rep.) versus Noone (Dem.) for senate.

Morrow's State

NEW JERSEY—Walkaway foreseen by Morrow (Rep.) in senate race against Simpson (Dem.) and Thelma Parkinson (also Dem., for short term). Democrats much earlier had anticipated New Jersey gains in house of representatives, but influence of Morrow's personality unquestionably has extinguished them—except nominally.

NEW MEXICO—Outlook decidedly favorable to Bratton (Dem.) versus Holt (Rep.) for senate.

NEW YORK—While the Empire

state is without a senate contest this year the importance of the governorship fight between Roosevelt (Dem.) and Tuttle (Rep.) places it in the forefront of interest among the states in the coming election. Roosevelt is regarded by forecasters here as having the edge, but no certainty of victory. Hardly needly to say, his Democratic presidential prospects largely depend on it.

NORTH CAROLINA—Senatorially, the outlook strongly favors Bailey (Dem.), but Trichard (Rep.) is regarded as having a fighting chance, by reason of ill-feeling engendered among Democrats during Bailey's primary fight with Senator Simmons, beaten for renomination. Democrats hope to recover several representatives' seats lost in the 1928 landslide.

NORTH DAKOTA—No senate contest.

OHIO—For senate impartial forecasters generally favor Bulkley (Dem.) against McCulloch (Rep.), mainly on the strength of Bulkley's wetness. Also, paradoxically, they favor the dry Democratic gubernatorial candidate, White, against Cooper (Rep.), who, also, however, is a dry. Democrats are gunning for several representative gains in Ohio.

OKLAHOMA—For senate, nip-and-tuck race between Pine (Rep.) and Gore (Dem.), with perhaps a shade in the latter's favor.

OREGON—Senatorial chances strongly favor McNary (Rep.), though recent developments are reported to the advantage of Watkins (Dem.); probably insufficient materially to alter the result, however.

Pinchot's Struggle

PENNSYLVANIA—By reason of the Keystone State's enormous normal G. O. P. majority it would be rash to predict Pinchot's defeat as Republican gubernatorial candidate, but Hemphill (Dem.) at least promises to give him a desperate tussle. The Pinchot-Hemphill struggle completely overshadows the senatorial fight, in which, however, Davis (Rep.) so far outclasses Kistler (Dem.) that the latter's name is scarcely heard. Chances are for several Democratic congressional gains.

RHODE ISLAND—Anyone's race between Metcalf (Rep.) and Gerry (Dem.) for senate.

SOUTH CAROLINA—For senate, Byrnes (Dem.) unopposed. Ditto Democratic nominees as representatives.

SOUTH DAKOTA—Prospects for senate favorable to McMaster (Rep.), but by a perilously narrow margin, as against Bulow (Dem.).

 TENNESSEE—Brook and Hull (both Dem.) considered safe for short and long senate terms, respectively, against Meacham and Divine (both Rep.). |

In Texas

TEXAS—For senate, Sheppard (Dem.) as good as re-elected over Harris (Rep.) Democratic representative candidates unopposed except in Fourteenth district.

UTAH—No senate contest.

VERMONT—No senate contest.

VIRGINIA—Senatorial walkover assured for Glass (Dem.) versus Byrns (Ind.) and Morrow (Soc.).

WASHINGTON—No senate contest.

WEST VIRGINIA—Though a very persistently Republican state, senatorial chances of Neely (Dem.) considered excellent against Jones (Rep.).

WISCONSIN—No senate contest; a most important state, nationally speaking, but politically disposed upward to encourage the present campaign, at its primary test September 2.

WYOMING—Senatorial advantage seemingly favorable to Cary (Rep.) versus Schwartz (Dem.).

Fattening Thin Folks Is Difficult

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

The most troublesome problem of the dietitian is to "fatten up" people who are constitutionally lean. It is about as hopeless as stuffing a greyhound so it will look like a pug.

Many thin people, as was noticed yesterday, are thin because they have an organic disease. The "living skeleton" of the side show has a nervous disease resulting in atrophy of the muscles. The commonest organic disease responsible for underweight is tuberculosis. In the general vogue for the slender figure those who were able to diet themselves into it with the greatest ease were often found afterwards to have tuberculosis. The depressing list of prominent motion picture actresses who died of tuberculosis testifies to that. The fact that they dieted so strenuously in order to preserve figures which would hold them their positions was frequently blamed for the tuberculosis. This was probably only partially just. The tuberculosis was present all the time, but the starvation diet certainly did not help to hold it in check.

But the "born to be thin" type is much more common. They are built on the long plan—generally tall, but whether tall or short, with long, thin neck, enormous flat chest, gangling arms and bony, slender hands and narrow feet. The skin is so loose you can pick up a layer and pull it away from the flesh. There is no fat layer to cement it to the underlying tissues. The muscles can be seen, interlined with tendons, like cordage under the paper layer of silky skin.

Their whole machinery seems absolutely incapable of storing up any extra pounds of flesh. They can shovel food into themselves endlessly with no apparent results.

That is not quite a proper statement, however, because one of their difficulties is that the digestive system follows the architecture of the eternal framework of the body. The stomach is long and hangs low. It does not empty itself easily. The intestines are looped down, and hang low in the abdomen. These structural changes render these people considerably inefficient in digestion. They are likely to be dyspeptics. Food remains in the stomach overlong and causes "heavy feelings" and "gas." They are constipated. The whole digestive system adds to the difficulty of the situation by utilizing a very limited capacity to utilize food. If you could stuff an amount into them they might fatten, but you can't.

Along with all this goes a general spiritual depression—a settled melancholy. The Lincoln type. They are restless and expend energy needlessly.

A gain in weight changes many of their peculiarities. Fat deposited in the abdomen raises the stomach and intestines and relieves much of the dyspepsia. With the first gain in weight these people begin to improve. If they go "over the hump" in their weight curve, they then gradually, but steadily, get heavier.

Thank God for Good Husband

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

"Virginia Lee: I have read your column for quite a while, but never have seen anything that would help me with my problem."

"I have been married nearly 12 years to a man I do not love. I had a very hard life at home and ran away, and the man I was going with begged me to marry, so I thought I was really better off than to try to work out, but I had it to do all over again I would go through more hardship and marry the man I loved."

"My husband is as good to me as any husband can be, and is always talking of the little home we shall have some day. And this is what hurts. It nearly makes me sick. Yes, I believe I'd be the happiest woman on earth with a nice little home where I could grow flowers and have everything fixed up nice for the man I loved, but this way all my money and flowers on earth couldn't make me happy. I'm so unhappy some days I think I can't stand this kind of a life another day."

"Yes, I love another man, love him more than words can tell. There is everything in him that I have always wanted, but he does not know I love him. It's rather hard to tell him, isn't it? I have always tried to be true to my husband and to be the wife I should be to him, but I cannot live this life all my life. I want away several months to visit my sisters and relatives, thinking this would help me, but it really made me feel worse. I hated to come back after seeing my sisters so happily married."

"I have two children and wouldn't part with them for anything on earth, and their father thinks as much of them as I do. Please advise me what to do, Virginia Lee."

"Unhappy Mother."

I advise you try emphatically to forget about this man you think you love and who does not know you love him. I say you do not know that you love him because one cannot know a person one has never lived with. You might, if you had married him, be even more unhappy than you are now.

You DO know that your husband is good to you. You know he is the father of your children and that he loves him and they him. You know that it would be tragedy to them all to break up your home. How could you be happy, then, even if this man you say you love and who could have one another?

Don't you see that the only sane, sensible thing to do is to thank God for your husband who is good to you and wants to make a little home for you and for your children? Thank Him for all your blessings, and ask Him to make you truly thankful that you will continue to be faithful and true to your family and worthy of them.

Every one misses something in life which makes her sad at times. You have missed marrying the man you could have loved. But kind that your children will look on with the sweetest and happiest feelings when they are older and far away from you.

DAGGER: Maybe if you don't speak to the boy or pay much attention to him he will be more likely to notice you. Try it.

Use Brush To Cleanse Your Skin

By GLADYS GLAD

In a recent article, I spoke to you of the harmful effects of strenuously rubbing rouge and powder on the face. I think that equally as much damage to the skin results from the way in which many of us cleanse our faces.

I do not approve of the use of rough, coarse wash cloths on the face. If your skin is oily, and you cleanse your face with soap and water instead of a cleansing cream, you should have a very soft shaving brush for the purpose. The cleansing that is done with the brush is far more effective, and far more thorough than that accomplished with the washcloth. Moreover, the brush is a much gentler implement for cleansing the tender skin of the face. The skin grows thick to protect itself when you treat it harshly. Callouses are sufficient proof of this fact.

Another advantage of using the brush is that there is none of the pull and tug on the facial muscles that accompanies the scrubbing of the face with a wash cloth of even the softest material. If you pull these elastic tissues around roughly, they will become stretched and lose their tautness.

If you wish (and for the oily skin it is the best method), apply a bit of cream to your face before washing it with the brush. Only the slightest manipulation of the brush is necessary. The strokes should be upward, to encourage the muscles to retain their tautness. These strokes will never be as heavy and as destructive to facial muscles as the scrubbing with a coarse wash cloth.

To rinse the skin, dash first warm and then cold water on the face. Then using a soft towel, pat the face to remove the moisture. Don't rub your face dry. The patting will dry the skin. The warm and cold water, and the strokes of the brush, will provide sufficient stimulation to keep the skin in a healthy condition.

MELLON'S SIMILE

Secretary Mellon could have enlarged upon his simile of this nation as a ship riding out a storm of depression, with Captain Hoover at the helm, without impairing either its rhetorical or political effect. A captain can't bring his vessel into port single-handed. A good deal depends on the crew that its owners give him to work with. The crew in this case is congress.

The ship is strong. The worm and canker of defeatism has not eaten deep into her timbers. She has ridden out other storms, when the waves of world-wide depression buffeted her as they are doing today. She will ride out this one. The only question is: Shall she be condemned to drift with the sea, while an unfriendly and mutinous crew wrangles with the captain over the course to be laid; or shall her arrival in the port of economic recovery be hastened by signing on a crew that will work sympathetically with the man at the wheel?

The people, who own this ship we call the United States, are asking that question at the polls today. Will they give Captain Hoover a crew in the engine room of congress, which will do its best to keep the boilers of employment cool until after the presidential contest of 1932; or will they give him a crew that will respond instantly to the signal for full steam ahead?

This is no time for a partisan division of authority in Washington, as Secretary Mellon points out. This is no time to talk of punishing an administration for an economic debacle for which it was not responsible, as Al Smith frankly admitted in his radio speech recently. A condition confronts the country.

At the head of the government we have, and for the next two years shall have, a man who has proved himself competent not only to steer the country through to prosperity; but to do it well inside the best time made by any predecessor under similar circumstances, if his policies are not obstructed by partisan foes. The country must pick the crew which is to help him.

GUESSING CONTEST

When he named the 64 men he regards as "ruling" the United States, James W. Gerard started something as entertaining as tree sitting. All shapes and kinds of men and women have suddenly become listers or listees of greatness. Congressman LaGuardia claims that the "best minds" of the Republican party are convinced of the failure of prohibition and he publishes a list of 23 of the very best of them. A newspaper alliance has induced Ida M. Tarbell, who might well have included herself in the number, to select the 50 foremost living American women.

Canada has caught the infection. The Montreal Herald finds that 2 men rule Canada about as much as Gerard's 64 rule the United States and names them. Guessing at the great has trapped even George Bernard Shaw. The other night he counted off all the universe makers the last 2,500 years has produced on his fingers—and found that he had two fingers left for himself, a modest reservation under the circumstances.

Our reaction to all this is to applaud Douglas Fairbanks' observation that Shaw might have allocated at least one of his two spare fingers to Thomas A. Edison. "If it were not for Edison," said Doug, "I would be out of a job." That is the real test of greatness in the eyes of 99.94 per cent of the people in a world in which the biggest job is getting a living. The man who created jobs for movie actors and entertainment for movie fans is to millions of men, women and children a greater benefactor than Aristotle, Copernicus or Galileo, whose backers are numerically comparatively negligible.

Guessing at the great would be a more useful game if it were surrounded with Queensberry rules. At least some universal standard of comparison should be set up. As long as this free lance guessing goes on unbiased eyes will continue to be offended by selections obviously fathered by racial or personal prejudices. Al Capone will be listed by some among the de facto rulers of the country. Others will boost for the author of the prohibition amendment. The only advantage of the present free-for-all is that it permits every man to feel that the woman he loves is the foremost woman in America, a sentiment she reciprocates by calling him the most wonderful man in the world.

ALL of US

WE MUST PAY OUR WAY

You know the lad who always, somehow, manages to let you pay his street car fare? He seems to be trying to get to the cashbox first, but he never wins the race. It's always your money and not his that pays the fare. And after a while you begin to wonder if he isn't one of those fellows who never Pay Their Way—and you don't like him as much as you did. He saves a few cents and loses your Respect.

You know the acquaintance who never gets the dinner check? You get it, and he says he'll pay next time, but he never does. He's saving his money for something else and every dinner that somebody else pays for is so much more money in his bank account. . . . He's getting ahead, but he's not Paying His Way. He saves a dollar and loses your friendliness.

You know the people who whimper about life and shrink from its responsibilities—and let them fall onto the shoulders of those who are nearest and ought to be dearest to them. Again, those people are failing to Pay Their Way. They save themselves trouble and suffering, but they lose their OWN Self-Respect.

None of these people Pay Their Way. None of them seem to understand that one of the greatest sources of happiness in life is to feel an obligation toward other people and to pay that debt. The Little Men do not know that, but the Big Men do, and lately I learned something about one Great Man that made me warm to him as if I'd found a friend.

The man is Albert Einstein. We have all heard about that man. We've heard his name frequently enough these last few years, even though we do not understand those complicated mathematical formulae that he works out in his subtle brain and sets on paper. He is famous and he may be famous as long as Human History is being made. . . . We could forgive him for being proud and arrogant.

But just last week I learned that Albert Einstein is not proud but HUMBLE. I read something by him that made me understand how simple and kind the man really is. In two pages in a magazine he picked the truth about himself. He said there is just one thing in life that all of us know: we are here on earth for other men and women, for those who are closest to us and for those, also, whom we will never see. Frequently every day Albert Einstein realizes how much his entire life, within and without, is dependent on the labor of other people, living and dead, and he tells himself again and again how hard he must work in his short visit to this earth to repay a little of his debt to human beings. And very often, he said, he is made unhappy by the fear that he has taken too much from other men and will NEVER be able to pay back what he has borrowed.

Do you feel humble in the presence of this great man, so soberly confessing a fear that he has not Paid His Way? Though all his mathematical theories may prove false, though all his fame be fleeting, by that great confession alone he Pays His Way and makes the rest of us ashamed.

Dixie Land

Where did the phrase "Dixie Land" originate?

The derivation of the phrase "Dixie Land" is obscure. It is said to have originated in New York, where a certain Dixie owned a large number of slaves. When these slaves were obliged to migrate to the south, they grew to look upon their old home as a sort of paradise, which they celebrated in their songs. In time the term "Dixie Land" was transferred to the south among the whites as well as the negroes. The term "Dixie Land" is also popularly connected with Mason and Dixon's line—the line of division between the free and slave states.

Bo-Broadway

By JOSEPH VAN RAALTE

NEW YORK.—If you travel long enough in Tammany yard, and in a manner sufficiently discriminating, sooner or later you encounter every phase of human activity.

I journeyed across to the fringe of Mazda Lane last week to find an alling thespian. In the "front parlor" of the theatrical boarding house I encountered a gentleman nearly nine feet tall. In the course of conversation he informed me that he is a "retired" circus giant.

IDLERS ALL

Knocking around New York every day you marvel, after a while, at the army of well dressed men and women who aren't "going nowhere." You encounter them smoking, all afternoon in Broadway coffee houses, looking dreamily out at the rain, window-shopping on the sunny side of The Avenue on cool mornings, or seated comfortably in the movie or vaudeville theatres, with nothing on their minds worth mentioning. How most of them live is a puzzle. What endeavor, mental or physical, they translate into coin, is a mystery.

OLD TIMERS

They could't get the handouts off an actor in one of the Broadway crook shows the other night and someone suggested that he go around to the police station.

Three newspaper men there whose aggregate experience amounted to something like seventy years, purged casually at their camel's hair cigarettes, calm and detached as so many stuffed weasels. Far be it from them to interfere with a press agent's stunt.

And said the publicity man of the show:

"That's the worst of being so confoundingly hard-boiled. If I had framed that thing as a press agent it would have appeared in every sheet in town, but because it wasn't a fake—because it lacked the brass-bound compactness that characterizes most fabricated theatrical

THE BOYS STOOD ON THE BURNING DECK!

WASHINGTON.—Generally speaking the states (approximately one-third of the entire 48) where senators are to be chosen November 4 are the objects of national politicians' keenest attention. In a few, however, governorship fights overshadow senatorial contests.

Regarded as a wholesale proposition, nothing overshadows in importance the struggles for control of the next house of representatives, but with nearly 1,000 candidates in the field (counting independents), it is not yet possible even for experts to consider the situation in much detail.

State by State

A once-over of debatable states suggests the following conclusions:

ALABAMA—Prospects better than 50-50 for Bankhead (Dem.) for senate, but Heflin (Ind.) still formidable, otherwise Democratic, as usual.

ARIZONA—No senate contest.

ARKANSAS—For senate, Robinson (Dem.) unopposed since withdrawal of Greathouse (Ind.). Otherwise solidly Democratic.

CALIFORNIA—No senate contest.

COLORADO—For senate, race close between Shaw (Rep.) and Costigan (Dem.), with advantage perhaps slightly in former's favor, though rather because of state's normal Republicanism than from any indications apparent in present fight, which looks nip-and-tuck on its individual merits. Democrats also hopeful of annexing a Denver representative seat.

CONNECTICUT—No senate contest. Otherwise Republican, as usual.

DELAWARE—About 50-50 between Hastings (Rep.) and Bayard (Dem.) for senate. Representative-at-large's seat also hotly contested.

FLORIDA—No senate contest. Representativeally all Democratic.

IDAHO—Borah (Rep.) considered as good as re-elected senator.

GEORGIA—Harris (Dem.) unopposed for senate. Ditto all Democratic candidates for representatives' seats.

ILLINOIS—Except for an appalling normal Republican majority to overcome edge apparently with Lewis (Dem.) for senate against Mrs. McCormick (Rep.), with Mrs. O'Neill (Ind.) impossible of election, but promising to draw heavily from McCormick vote. Democrats hopeful of gains in various congressional districts.

INDIANA—No senate contest.

Stories, the sophisticated scribes in the back room of the police station rejected it.

"Your good reporter never outgrows the age of astonishment. He is seldom fooled because he refuses to be duped by his fear of being duped. There is no boob on earth like the half-wise sap!"

All of which may be true, nevertheless, I vote along with The Boys in the Back Room.

"DE LAWD'S" MISTAKE

Richard Harrison who plays "De Lawd" in "The Green Pastures" voices the belief that Marc Connelly, its author, is entitled to full credit for the success of the play. He doesn't give a look-in to Roark Bradford, whose book, "Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillum," Connelly dramatized.

"There's a deep religious spirit to the play," says Harrison, "that you won't find in the Bradford book."

I hat to take issue with "De Lawd" in a matter of this kind; but I'm afraid Brother Harrison hasn't read "Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillum" with a sympathetic and discerning eye.

NEBRASKA—Norris (very progressive Rep.) generally considered safe against Hitchcock (Dem.), but still bitterly fought by conservative element in both major parties.

NEVADA—No senate contest.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Wide margin in favor of Keyes (Rep.) versus Noone (Dem.) for senate.

Morrow's State

NEW JERSEY—Walkaway foreseen by Morrow (Rep.) in senate race against Simpson (Dem.) and Thelma Parkinson (also Dem.) for short term. Democrats much earlier had anticipated New Jersey gains in house of representatives, but influence of Morrow's personality unquestionably has extinguished them—except nominally.

NEW MEXICO—Outlook decidedly favorable to Bratton (Dem.) versus Holt (Rep.) for senate.

NEW YORK—While the Empire

state is without a senate contest this year the importance of the governorship fight between Roosevelt (Dem.) and Tuttle (Rep.) places it in the forefront of the coming election. Roosevelt is regarded by forecasters here as having the edge, but no certainty of victory. Hardly needly to say, his Democratic presidential prospects largely depend on it.

IOWA—Dickinson (Rep.) generally considered certain to win over Steck (Dem.), a gain of a senate seat for Republicans. Otherwise solidly Republican.

KANSAS—Two senate contests: Allen (Rep.) versus McGill (Dem.) and Perkins (Soc.) for short term, and Capper (Rep.) versus Davis (Dem.) for regular six-year term. Victory of Allen and Capper considered foregone conclusion.

KENTUCKY—Anyone's fight between Robeson (Rep.) and Williamson (Rep.) against McCulloch (Rep.) respectively for short and long terms, as senate candidates. Democrats hopeful of several representative gains.

LOUISIANA—Long (Dem.) unopposed for senate. Democratic nominees as representatives ditto.

MAINE—White (Rep.) elected senator September 8. Representative's delegation solidly Republican.

MARYLAND—No senate contest. Governorship fight of more than average consequence because of Democratic candidate, Ritchie's, presidential possibilities. Gubernatorial chances deemed strongly favorable to him over Broening (Rep.). Democrats hopeful of gaining a congressional district or two.

MASSACHUSETTS' Battle

MASSACHUSETTS—Senatorial indications seemingly favorable to Coolidge (Dem.) over Butler (Rep.) because of state's pre-eminable wet preference labor's open opposition to Butler and employment issue. Contrariwise gubernatorial advantage seemingly with Allen (Rep.) against Ely (Dem.). Democrats hopeful of some representative gains, but conversely are threatened with loss of at least one district they now hold—Calvin Coolidge's.

MICHIGAN—Senatorial Couzens (Rep.) undoubtedly already the equivalent of re-elected.

MINNESOTA—Senatorial advantage somewhat with Schall (Rep.) but Hoidale (Dem.) fighting formidably. Lundeen (F. L.) unlikely of election, but strong minority vote important to his party to prevent threatened evaporation of its state organization. Representative prospects much chopped up among Republicans, Democrats and Farmer-Laborites.

MISSISSIPPI—Pat Harrison (Dem.) unopposed for senate. Ditto all Democratic nominees as representatives.

MISSOURI—No senate contest. Democrats hopeful of gaining several representatives.

MONTANA—Nip-and-tuck fight between Walsh (Dem.), a strong candidate but in danger, many think, by reason of his Republican opponent, Galen's, wetness, in a state wet enough to have repealed its baby vote act.

NEBRASKA—Norris (very progressive Rep.) generally considered safe against Hitchcock (Dem.), but still bitterly fought by conservative element in both major parties.

NEVADA—No senate contest.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Wide margin in favor of Keyes (Rep.) versus Noone (Dem.) for senate.

Morrow's State

NEW JERSEY—Walkaway foreseen by Morrow (Rep.) in senate race against Simpson (Dem.) and Thelma Parkinson (also Dem.) for short term. Democrats much earlier had anticipated New Jersey gains in house of representatives, but influence of Morrow's personality unquestionably has extinguished them—except nominally.

NEW MEXICO—Outlook decidedly favorable to Bratton (Dem.) versus Holt (Rep.) for senate.

Fattening Thin Folks Is Difficult

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

The most troublesome problem of the dietitian is to "fatten up" people who are constitutionally lean. It is about as hopeless as stuffing a greyhound so it will look like a pug.

Many thin people, as was noticed yesterday, are thin because they have an organic disease. The "living skeleton" of the side show has a nervous disease resulting in atrophy of the muscles. The commonest organic disease responsible for underweight is tuberculosis. In the general vogue for the slender figure those who were able to diet themselves into it with the greatest ease were often found afterwards to have tuberculosis. The depressing list of prominent motion picture actresses who died of tuberculosis testifies to that. The fact that they dieted so strenuously in order to preserve figures which would hold them their positions was frequently blamed for the tuberculosis. This was probably only partially just. The tuberculosis was present all the time, but the starvation diet certainly did not help to hold it in check.

But the "born to be thin" type is much more common. They are built on the long plan—generally tall, but whether tall or short, with long, thin neck, enormous flat chest, gangling arms and bony, slender hands and narrow feet.

The skin is so loose you can pick up a layer and pull it away from the flesh. There is no fat layer to cement it to the underlying tissues. The muscles can be seen, interlined with tendons, like cordage under the paper layer of silky skin.

Their whole machinery seems absolutely incapable of storing up any extra pounds of flesh. They can shovel food into themselves endlessly with no apparent results.

That is not quite a proper statement, however, because one of their difficulties is that the digestive system follows the architecture of the eternal framework of the body. The stomach is long and hangs low. It does not empty itself easily. The intestines are looped down, and hang low in the abdomen. These structural changes render these people considerably inefficient in digestion. They are likely to be dyspeptics. Food remains in the stomach overlong and causes "heavy feelings" and "gas." They are constipated. The whole digestive system adds to the difficulty of the situation by having a very limited capacity to utilize food. If you could stuff any amount into them they might fatten, but you can't.

Along with all this goes a general spiritual depression—a settled melancholy. The Lincoln type. They are restless and expend energy needlessly.

A gain in weight changes many of their peculiarities. Fat deposited in the abdomen raises the stomach and intestines and relieves much of the dyspepsia. With the first gain in weight these people begin to improve. If they go "over the hump" in the weight curve, they then gradually, but steadily, get heavier.

Thank God for Good Husband

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

"Virginia Lee: I have read your column for quite a while, but never have seen anything that would help me with my problem.

"I have been married nearly 12 years to a man I do not love. I had a very hard life at home and ran away, and the man I was going with begged me to marry, so

I thought I was really better off than to try to work out, but if I had it to do all over again I would go through more hardship and marry the man I loved.

"My husband is so good to me as any husband can be, and is always talking of the little home we shall have some day. And this is what hurts. It nearly makes me sick. Yes, I believe I'd be the happiest woman on earth with a nice little home where I could grow flowers and have everything fixed up nice for the man I loved, but this way all the money and flowers on earth couldn't make me happy. I'm so unhappy some days I think I can't stand this kind of a life another day.

"Yes, I love another man, love him more than words can tell. There is everything in him that I have always wanted, but he does not know I love him. It's rather one-sided, isn't it? But I have always tried to be true to my husband and to be the wife I should be to him, but I cannot live this life all my life. I went away several months to visit my sisters and relatives, thinking this would help me, but it really made me feel worse. I hated to come back after seeing my sister's so happily married.

"I have two children and wouldn't part with them for anything on earth, and their father thinks much of them, as I do. Please advise me what to do, Virginia Lee.

"Unhappy Mother."

I forgive you very emphatically to admit about this man you think you love and who does not know you love him. I say you do not know that love is because one cannot know a person one has never lived with. You might, if you had married him, be even more unhappy than you are now.

You DO know that your husband is good to you. You know he is the father of your children and that he loves him and they him. You know that it would be tragedy to them all to break up your home. How could you be happy, then, even if this man you say you love and you could have one another?

Don't you see that the only sane, sensible thing to do is to thank God for your husband who is good to you and wants to make a little home for you and for your children? Thank Him for all your blessings, and ask Him to make you so truly thankful that you will continue to be faithful and true to your family and worthy of them.

Every one misses something in life which makes her sad at times. You have missed marrying the man you could have loved. But love might have passed you by altogether. You might never have known what it was to have a good man love you and work for you. You might never have had a dear little baby put its arms around you and call you mother. That is real grief, but there are many women who have that to bear and who, instead of making themselves unhappy and moaning about how badly life has treated them, are doing various jobs and being happy and jolly.

Don't "enjoy" it. Acknowledge your loss to yourself, if you must, and then forget about it. Walling about what you have lost will get you nowhere, but being happy and laughing off your sorrows and making the happiest kind of a home for the husband—even if he isn't the one you would have chosen—and the children, growing flowers and making and keeping friends is a job that will not only bring you happiness, but will influence for good the lives of countless others. Make your home the kind that your children will look on with the sweetest and happiest feelings when they are older and far away from you.

DAGGER: Maybe if you don't speak to the boy or pay much attention to him he will be more likely to notice you. Try it.

Use Brush To Cleanse Your Skin

By GLADYS GLAD

In a recent article, I spoke to you of the harmful effects of strenuous rubbing with soap powder on the face. I think that equally as much damage to the skin results from the way in which many of us cleanse our faces.

I do not approve of the use of rough, coarse wash cloths on the face. If your skin is oily, and you cleanse your face with soap and water instead of a cleansing cream, you should have a very soft shaving brush for the purpose. The cleansing that is done with the brush is far more effective, and far more thorough than that accomplished with the washcloth. Moreover, the brush is a much gentler implement for cleansing the tender skin of the face. The skin grows thick to protect itself when you treat it harshly. Callouses are sufficient proof of this fact.

Another advantage of using the brush is that there is none of the pull and tug on the facial muscles that accompanies the scrubbing of the face with a wash cloth of even the softest material. If you pull these elastic tissues around roughly, they will become stretched and lose their tautness.

If you wish (and for the oily skin it is the best method), apply a bit of cream to your face before washing it with the brush. Only the slightest manipulation of the brush is necessary. The strokes should be upward, to encourage the muscles to retain their tautness. These strokes will never be as heavy and as destructive to facial muscles as the scrubbing with a coarse wash cloth.

To rinse the skin, dash first warm and then cold water on the face. Then use a soft towel, pat the face to remove the moisture. Don't rub your face dry. The patting will dry the skin. The warm and cold water, and the strokes of the brush, will provide sufficient stimulation to keep the skin in a healthy condition.

SPORT SNAP SHOTS

FRAMED
by Phil

Speaking of boomerangs—consider the football code, rewritten for 1930 by the rule makers.

Designed to cover all possible situations in a manner which it was supposed would make the game more clearly understandable for players, spectators and officials alike, and at the same time produce more fairly contested contests, exactly the opposite has turned out to be the case this season, it is generally agreed.

Frank Lane, one of the country's leading football referees and an authority on the rules, recently discussed various phases of the new grid code in an article appearing in a Cincinnati newspaper, in which it is pointed out that the revised rules add to the confusion instead of clarifying the situation, as was intended to be the case.

Bewildered fans have wondered on many occasions this season at the reasons for different rulings on what were apparently similar plays, he declares.

"For instance, take the play on which Yale was awarded a touchdown against Georgia on a fumbled ball which nestled on the fly in the eager arms of a son of Eli who entered the necessary yard goalward. Since this fumble resulted from a Yale kick-off and the rule reads that all kicked balls are 'dead' where recovered by the kicking side, it would appear the officials of this game 'booted' the decision.

"But what makes the fan gasp is that after he has witnessed a play like the one above described and learns that it is not a legal way to score a touchdown, at a subsequent game he sees a defensive player capture a fumbled ball in the air and race over the goal line. The fan confidentially nudges the nearest coonskin coat and confides that the officials will not allow the score. But again to his dismay he learns that the score is legal and allowed because the fumble resulted from a scrimmage play.

"The fan has witnessed something which appears to his eyes and other uninitiated minds as identical plays—both fumbled balls recovered on the fly by defensive players—yet ruled differently.

"The fans ask why should there be a difference, and so do we."

The new forward pass rulings are also a source of much confusion, in the opinion of Mr. Lane, who explains that should two originally eligible players of the passing side touch a legally passed ball and then the oval is recovered before it hits the ground by a defensive player, the play must be ruled as an incomplete pass and the ball given back to the passing side.

"The alert defensive player does not retain possession of the ball unless the interception should happen on fourth down.

But then supposing a player of the passing side is struck by the ball and then a defensive player grasps the pigskin from the air and sets out goalward. The average fan would be convinced this play is all right because only one player of the passing side touched the ball prior to its interception by the defensive player. "But, alas and alack, that villain, the referee, calmly cancels a nice runback, because it so happens that the one player of the passing side who touched the ball first was ineligible to receive passes for his team and the rules say the ball is 'dead' in this instance the intercepting team does get the oval at the point of the previous down."

Mr. Lane also condemns the stress the rule makers are placing on the illegal shift and the full second pause required after each shift.

Heretofore sane officials are seen muttering a la Amos 'n' Andy 'to million-five million, 1-2-3-4-5 and 1001 and 1002 in an effort to arrive at a full second duration without using a split-second watch. Let's return to the old rule that, after a shift, all players come to a complete stop before the ball is passed."

It is small wonder, Mr. Lane thinks, that the fans grow restless and impatient with the officiating when the new rules are so complicated that even the officials themselves often go into a huddle to arrive at a ruling over an involved play.

As H. I. Phillips says in his definition of football rules, a touchdown is when a team gets the ball across the goal line without the officials going into a hasty conference over the matter.

THREE CONVICTS KILLED WHEN CAUGHT IN CAVE-IN OF ROCKS

ZANESVILLE, O., Nov. 4.—A cave-in of a shale and rock bank yesterday at the state prison brick plant at Roseville, twelve miles south of here, claimed the lives of three convicts and caused probable fatal injuries to a fourth.

Chas. Hubert, 35, of Hardin County, and Thomas Jackson, 30, of Cuyahoga County, were killed instantly. John Maddock, 42, of Trumbull County, died while he was being taken to a Columbus hospital.

Leonard Walls, 33, of Cuyahoga County, was taken to the prison hospital at Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, where it was found he suffered severe injuries to his back. His condition was reported as serious today.

Hulbert was received at the Ohio penitentiary in January, 1928 to serve seven years for larceny. Walls was received in November, 1925, to serve from seven to twenty years for manslaughter, and Maddock was sentenced in November, 1928, to serve from two to twenty years for burglary and larceny.

Walls is under a ten-year sentence for felonious assault. He was admitted in September, 1924. State officials began an investigation into the cause of the tragedy today. The four victims had been transferred to the brick plant as trustees from the state penitentiary.

Edgar D. McKinney, 31, well known automobile mechanic, died at his home, 210 Dayton Ave., Tuesday morning at 5:30 o'clock following an illness of several months. Mr. McKinney received injuries to his leg in an automobile accident while at his work several months ago and had never fully recovered.

He was born in Xenia December 12, 1898 and had spent his entire life here. Besides being an auto mechanic he was a licensed airplane pilot. His marriage to Miss Rozella Linkhart took place June 11, 1921 and he is survived by his widow and two daughters, Dolores and June. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. McKinney, and a step sister, Miss Lorena Mansfield also survive. Funeral services will be held at the home Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Friends may call Thursday afternoon and evening.

FIRE ON RIVER IS BURNING OUT

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Nov. 4.—Under control, the blazing fire of oil on the North Canadian River appeared to be burning itself out today as firemen kept a close watch.

Fed by the Morgan oil gusher which was brought under control Sunday, the river accumulated a heavy deposit of the crude oil. The oil was ignited late yesterday, creating a blazing inferno which destroyed two small bridges on country roads, one near Spencer, the other near McCloud, east of Oklahoma City.

The first fire from the oil on the river was about seven miles east of the city. The river goes under several concrete bridges on the main state highway between Oklahoma City and Shawnee, but these are believed to be fireproof and no damage was expected as the flames diminished.

LINDY IS NO HELP

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 4.—If Dwight W. Morrow is elected to the United States senate today in New Jersey he will win without the support of his famous son-in-law, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. There was some question, also, as to whether Mrs. Lindbergh, the former Anne Morrow, may vote for her father.

Lindbergh still holds legal and voting residence in St. Louis although he recently purchased extensive holdings here. Mrs. Lindbergh's voting address may be determined as St. Louis also, it was said.

HEAVY VOTING IS RECORDED AT XENIA POLLS ON TUESDAY

The electorate in Greene County was trekking to the polls in large numbers Tuesday to have its say on the maze of conflicting issues which has heightened interest in what has been characterized as the warmest "off-year" election campaign in twenty years.

Fair weather prevailed for the voting, indicating that the vote recorded in this county would rival that registered at the presidential election two years ago when between 13,000 and 15,000 votes were cast.

A survey of various polling places in Xenia at noon disclosed an estimate of precinct officials that almost half of the possible voters had been already been recorded.

The precinct at the Dakin Bldg. reported 170 votes and the polling place in City Hall announced a total of 133 votes.

Tabulation of the vote by the board of elections after the polls close at 6:30 p. m. Tuesday is expected to be a faster process than usual and first returns are expected to be available about 7 o'clock or shortly thereafter.

Election board officials have been instructed to remain on the job until the entire unofficial vote for the forty-eight precincts has been obtained.

Girls of the college will take part in a similar contest next spring and will share the $15 offered annually for this purpose by Miss Margaret Rife, Springfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Karl R. Babb and Miss Mildred Sandoe, Xenia, acted as judges for the boys' contest.

SPORT SNAP SHOTS

FRAMED
by Phil

Speaking of boomerangs—consider the football code, rewritten for 1930 by the rule makers.

Designed to cover all possible situations in a manner which it was supposed would make the game more clearly understandable for players, spectators and officials alike, and at the same time produce more fairly contested contests, exactly the opposite has turned out to be the case this season, it is generally agreed.

Frank Lane, one of the country's leading football referees and an authority on the rules, recently discussed various phases of the new grid code in an article appearing in a Cincinnati newspaper, in which it is pointed out that the revised rules add to the confusion instead of clarifying the situation, as was intended to be the case.

Bewildered fans have wondered on many occasions this season at the reasons for different rulings on what were apparently similar plays, he declares.

For instance, take the play on which Yale was awarded a touchdown against Georgia on a fumbled ball which nestled on the fly in the eager arms of a son of Eli who cantered the necessary yards goalward. Since this fumble resulted from a Yale kick-off and the rule reads that all kicked balls are "dead" where recovered by the kicking side, it would appear the officials of this game "booted" the decision.

"But what makes the fan gasp is, that after he has witnessed a play like the one above described and learns that it is not a legal way to score a touchdown, at a subsequent game he sees a defensive player capture a fumbled ball in the air and race over the goal line. The fan confidentially nudges the nearest conksman and confides that the officials will not allow the score. But again to his dismay he learns that the score is legal and allowed because the fumble resulted from a scrimmage play.

"The fan has witnessed something which appears to him and other uninitiated minds as identical plays—both fumbled balls recovered on the fly by defensive players—yet ruled differently. "The fans ask why should there be a difference, and so do we."

The new forward pass rulings are also a source of much confusion, in the opinion of Mr. Lane, who explains that should two originally eligible players of the passing side touch a legally passed ball and then the oval is recovered before it hits the ground by a defensive player, the play must be ruled as an incomplete pass and the ball given back to the passing side. "The alert defensive player does not retain possession of the ball unless the interception should happen on fourth down."

But then supposing a player of the passing side is struck by the ball and then a defensive player grasps the piskin from the air and sets out goalward. The average fan would be convinced this play is all right because only one player of the passing side touched the ball prior to its interception by the defensive player. "But, alas and alack, that villain, the referee, calmly cancels a nice runback, because it so happens that the one player of the passing side who touched the ball first was ineligible to receive pass for his team and the rules say the ball is dead," the in this instance the intercepting team does get the oval at the point of the previous down."

Mr. Lane also condemns the stress the rule makers are placing on the illegal shift and the full second pause required after each shift.

Heretofore sane officials are seen muttering a la Amos 'n' Andy to million-fives 1-2-3-4-5 and 1001 and 1002 in an effort to arrive at a full second duration without using a split-second watch. Let's return to the old rule that, after a shift, all players come to a complete stop before the ball is passed."

It is small wonder, Mr. Lane thinks, that the fans grow restless and impatient with the officiating when the new rules are so complicated that even the officials themselves ofttime go into a huddle to arrive at a ruling over an involved play.

As H. I. Phillips says in his definition of football rules, a touchdown is when a team gets the ball across the goal line without the officials going into a hasty conference over the matter.

LINDY IS NO HELP

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 4.—If Dwight W. Morrow is elected to the United States senate today in New Jersey he will win without the support of his famous son-in-law, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. There was some question, also, as to whether Mrs. Lindbergh, the former Anne Morrow, may vote for her father.

Lindbergh still holds legal and voting residence in St. Louis although he recently purchased extensive holdings here. Mrs. Lindbergh's voting address may be determined as St. Louis also, it was said.

HEAVY VOTING IS RECORDED AT XENIA POLLS ON TUESDAY

The electorate in Greene County was trekking to the polls in large numbers Tuesday to have its say on the maze of conflicting issues which has heightened interest in what has been characterized as the warmest "off-year" election campaign in twenty years.

Fair weather prevailed for the voting, indicating that the vote recorded in this county would rival that registered at the presidential election two years ago when between 13,000 and 15,000 votes were cast.

A survey of various polling places in Xenia at noon disclosed an estimate of precinct officials that almost half of the possible vote had been already been recorded.

The precinct at the Dakin Bldg. reported 170 votes and the polling place in City Hall announced a total of 133 votes.

Tabulation of the vote by the board of elections after the polls close at 6:30 p. m. Tuesday is expected to be a faster process than usual and first returns are expected to be available about 7 o'clock or shortly afterward.

Election board officials have been instructed to remain on the job until the entire unofficial vote for the forty-eight precincts has been obtained.

DON'T CUT YOUNG TREES FOR BURNING

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 4.—For a farmer to kill the best laying hen in his flock for Sunday dinner is no worse a mistake than to cut trees under twelve inches in diameter of valuable species for fuel, according to E. G. Wiesehuegel, professor of forestry for the Ohio State University.

When fuel is needed, he says, it is best to cut only the diseased and defective trees in the woodlot or some of the less valuable trees that never attain good size, such as dogwood, sassafras, and hop hornbeam or ironwood. Removal of such trees makes room for the more valuable species and aids them to develop properly.

Trees under twelve inches in diameter usually are young and will soon grow into valuable timber, the forester declares. After attaining a twelve-inch diameter, trees each add many more board feet than smaller trees. Walnut trees, he says, should never be cut under sixteen inches in diameter, because they contain such a small amount of valuable heart wood.

During the nine-year period the cash price of No. 2 red winter wheat, the grade of the largest part of Ohio-grown wheat, was 3.5 cents higher a bushel in July than in August. The greatest price spread occurred between the months of August and February. Wheat sold for an average of 15.5 cents more in February.

The average cost for nine years during August of cash wheat at Toledo was $1.35 a bushel. If there were no additional terminal charge, and the same number of bushels were stored each year, the return on the August investment would be 9.9 per cent.

Large speculative profits received by elevators during certain years acted as an incentive for storing. Foster found. As much profit as 73 cents a bushel accrued to those who stored wheat in August, 1924, and sold in January, 1925. In 1927, profits were 59 cents a bushel for storage between the months of August and May.

Unless the seller selected the right month, losses from storage without hedging protection were possible in all years except 1924 for wheat purchased in August.

PLENTY OF RADISH

BELLAIRE, O., Nov. 4.—One crop has been found that has not been hit by the eastern Ohio drought, John Williams, Rock Hill horse radish grower, reports a normal yield this year, in spite of the scarcity of water. A whiff of the horse radish proves that the season is about as hot as last summer's hottest days.

STORAGE OF WHEAT NETS SMALL PROFIT OVER NINE YEARS

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 4.—Over a period of nine years, storage of wheat at harvest without protection of hedging would have netted 6.5 cents a bushel profit for wheat bought in August and sold in February, according to information secured from a study of wheat prices by L. G. Foster, of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.

During the nine-year period the cash price of No. 2 red winter wheat, the grade of the largest part of Ohio-grown wheat, was 3.5 cents higher a bushel in July than in August. BILLINGS PLAYING CHESS BY MAIL AS HE AWAITS PARDON

FOLSOM, Calif., Nov. 4.—Playing chess by mail, painting water color pictures and working in the prison garden are the things Warren K. Billings does every day in Folsom prison while he waits for the State Supreme Court to decide whether he will go free after 13 years.

Billings plea to the Supreme Court—literally a retail of his alleged complexity in the Preparedness Day bombing outrage of 1916—will not be given a decision until late this month.

This according to Chief Justice William H. Wast, who says affidavits are yet to be submitted and also that the 700,000 word transcript of testimony in the recent hearing of Billings plea, is not yet typewritten.

In the meanwhile, however, as he waits for the decision that will either liberate him or mean the rest of his life in Folsom, Billings shows little concern.

"I'm not building too many plans on what the Supreme court may do," he says. "I've been disappointed before."

"Fifteen years will cause a man to become adjusted to one place. I am very much adjusted here. I live the best I know how. Maybe I'd be dissatisfied with the new world before me if I went 'out.' If the Supreme court gives me my liberty, Billings is the champion chess player of Folsom. Also the seventh best chess player in the United States.

Being a life-timer, naturally he doesn't go outside prison walls to participate in the national chess tournaments. Instead, like all the other contestants, he plays by mail correspondence.

Billings day-time task about the big gray prison is taking care of the flower gardens. In addition to becoming a cracker-jack chess player and studying enough law that he drew up his own brief in his first plea for pardon to the Supreme court, he also is a competent horticulturist and landscape gardener.

"Sooner or later it will come," he says of his plea for a pardon. "In the meantime, it won't help to lay awake nights. Whatever the final verdict is, worrying won't make it come any sooner."

Back in 1922 United Artists prepared to film the stage hit as a silent picture, but later gave up the idea. Jack Pickford was slated to be the star at that time. Haines is now on a vacation, having completed the radio thriller, "Remote Control."

CHAPTER 30

In the short forty-eight hours that Robin had been alone in his cell, he had grown years older. There was even a lock of white hair, hardly discernible, to be sure, in the great mass of sandy hair about it, but there, nevertheless, it had come during the first night. Robin looked at that lock in the tiny mirror with which he had been provided. It changed him, gave him added distinction; he was not unaware of this. God, if he should ever come out of this alive, he would show them! By "them" he meant the world, but particularly the portion of the world represented by the inquest. He would show them, he vowed again and again! He would be the greatest poet England ever had and the bravest man as well. Until that fatal escapade of his he had only given consideration to the poetry aspect of life, but now he saw the necessity for bravery.

He spent his days and nights pacing restlessly about the narrow cell, pausing often to raise his hands above his head and pray for strength and courage. Then he would sit down and write and write until he fell from exhaustion into a disturbed sleep. He scarcely seemed to notice the food or flowers or books which Lady Dorothy brought; he scarcely even noticed her when she came, except to be very kind and gentle as if it were she who was suffering and who must be comforted.

The two country jailers thought him daff. "He's a queer 'un, he is," one of them said. "Here's a noose hangin' over his head like, and he writin' and writin', as if writin' would save him!" What, indeed, was one to think of him?

Lady Dorothy was more worried about him than she had admitted. It was only Robin himself who knew that he was sicker than he had ever been before, sicker and bigger, with his feet on the ground at last. Not that he ever meant to give up reaching for the moon. It was only the unattainable which was worth attaining.

And that made him think of Lady Gwendolen.

He had thought of her these days. It was too unbearable! The girl whom he adored bereft of her only relative, alone, and he in jail as the cause of it all. It was hell!

And he thought not at all about the trial which would come off in the future, the trial of Smith versus the King. It didn't bear thinking of. He had refused to see a lawyer, refused to see anyone. Thank God, he had no near relatives to disgrace. His mother and father had died long ago and there were no brothers and sisters; only an uncle or two with whom he had obstinately refused to have anything to do. They hadn't understood him or appreciated his efforts at verse. That had been enough to condemn them at the time. Now he was chastened. He no longer believed his poetry to be the most important thing in the world, although it still held a high place. It was himself as a human being that he was demanding his attention. And he prayed again for courage and strength to act the part of a man to the last... whatever that last might prove to be.

"A lady to see you, Mr. Smith," the voice of the warder interrupted his thoughts.

Robin heard light footsteps approaching.

"Ah, Lady Dorothy," he called cheerily without looking up. "Come in!"

"I'm sorry to disappoint you," returned a low, sweet voice which set every nerve in his body quivering. "But it's only me."

"Lady Gwendolen!" he exclaimed hoarsely. "You! Here! He drew his hands across his eyes. She bent over and took his other hand in both of hers.

"I had to come," she explained simply with a catch in the deep voice. "I wanted to tell you how brave you are and how I admire you..."

Robin stood speechless and trembling slightly from shoes and tremor. "I know you are innocent, Mr. Smith. And I mean to prove it and save you..."

"You! Save me!" interrupted Robin with a puzzled frown as if he couldn't quite grasp the purport of her words.

"Yes," she continued. "I'm going to make up for every thoughtless laugh and every..."

"You mustn't! You mustn't!" begged Robin in a husky voice. "I can't bear it!"

Lady Gwendolen was nonplussed for an instant. She had not expected such a change... the white hair over his right eye startled her. It made him look so mature. And there were lines in the face, lines of pain and grief. He seemed to have grown up since she last saw him. Dignity had replaced the awkwardness and bumptiousness she had known. He was moved by her visit as she had never seen him moved except over his poems. "I've brought offerings galore from Lady Dorothy, and her best love," Lady Gwendolen announced with a deliberate attempt to be cheerful. "You must open them and see..."

"They can wait..." Robin stared at his visitor as if she were a ghost. So often he had dreamed... and now she was here! He didn't intend to waste any of the precious moments looking at Lady Dorothy's gifts.

"You really believe me innocent?"... I thought everyone agreed with the jury..."

"Hasn't Lady Dorothy told you? Why, Inspector Linscott and everyone is on your side! They've gone to London today to..." She stopped in confusion. "Perhaps I oughtn't to say anything..."

Robin's first bewilderment had given way to such an overwhelming thankfulness that his eyes caught something of their old gleam and a new note of hope was discernible in his voice.

"Oh, I'm so glad! Glad! I'd thought..." He stopped suddenly and looked questioningly at Lady Gwendolen. "Er... I hope Mr. Flint is well," he said.

A flicker of a smile played about the full red lips as Lady Gwendolen replied gravely: "He is quite well. I heard from him this morning. We are the best of friends again, but we both decided that the engagement was a mistake."

"You're not going to marry him!" Robin couldn't have kept the exclamation from his voice if he'd died for it.

"I'm not going to marry anyone..."

For quite two minutes the young couple stared at each other in silence then Lady Gwendolen rose from the single wooden chair on which she had been sitting.

"I must go now," she said huskily, holding out her hand.

Robin took it in his larger one and pressed it long, but he made no effort to keep her. It had all been so overwhelming, he wanted to be alone and get it straight. The engagement was broken; she was free! Free! And many people thought him innocent. She thought so! And there was hope that he soon would be free! Free! It was more than he could bear for very joy.

He watched the slim, black hatless figure as she walked down the narrow passage. Then he went over to his cot and threw himself down on his back, staring with sightless eyes at the low ceiling.

How long he lay there he did not afterwards remember. But quite suddenly he sprang up from his cot in a state of exultation he had never before experienced, and began to pace up and down the small cell, too small to allow his newborn energy full scope. Up and down, up and down, he paced the floor of his cell, like a caged lion suddenly awakened from his sleep and scenting free life outside.

It was as if Robin only now suddenly realized the full import of Lady Gwendolen's revelation. Before her he had forgotten everything, his poems, his confined life.

"I know you are innocent."

Robin couldn't have kept the exclamation from his voice if he'd died for it.

CALF-PATH

a not-too-serious analogy

Speaking of wasteful methods of doing business, reminds us of Sam Fox's famous poem, "The Calf-Path." A few selected lines explain what we mean.

One day, through a primeval wood, A calf walked home as good calves should; And left a trail all bent askew. A crooked trail as all calves do.

And from that day, o'er hill and glade, Through those old woods a path was made; And many men wound in and out, And dodged, and turned, and bent about And uttered words of righteous wrath Because 'twas such a crooked path.

The years passed on in swift fleet feet, The path became a village street; And this, before men were aware, A city's crowded thoroughfare. And men two centuries and a half Traded in the footsteps of that calf.

A hundred thousand men were led By one calf near three centuries dead... For thus such reverence is lent To well-established precedent.

CHAPTER 30

In the short forty-eight hours that Robin had been alone in his cell, he had grown years older. There was even a lock of white hair, hardly discernible, to be sure, in the great mass of sandy hair about it, but there, nevertheless. It had come during the first night. Robin looked at that lock in the tiny mirror with which he had been provided. It changed him, gave him added distinction; he was not unaware of this. God, if he should ever come out of this alive, he would show them! By "them" he meant the world, but particularly the portion of the world represented at the inquest. He would show them, he vowed again and again! He would be the greatest poet England ever had and the bravest man as well. Until that fatal escapade of his he had only given consideration to the poetry aspect of life, but now he saw the necessity for bravery.

He spent his days and nights pacing restlessly about the narrow cell, pausing often to raise his hands above his head and pray for strength and courage. Then he would sit down and write and write until he fell from exhaustion into a disturbed sleep. He scarcely seemed to notice the food or flowers or books which Lady Dorothy brought; he scarcely even noticed her when she came, except to be very kind and gentle as if it were she who was suffering and who must be comforted.

The two country jallies thought him daff. "He's a queer 'un, he is," one of them said. "Here's a noose hangin' over his head like, and he writin' and writin', as if writin' would save him!" What, indeed, was one to think of him?

Lady Dorothy was more worried about him than she had admitted. It was only Robin himself who knew that he was sadder than he had ever been before. He was a bigger, with his feet on the ground at last. Not that he ever meant to give up reaching for the moon. It was only the unattainable which was worth attaining.

And that made him think of Lady Gwendolen.

He seldom thought of her these days. It was too unbearable! The girl whom he adored herself, he had only relative, alone and he in jail as the cause of it all. It was hell!

And he thought not at all about the trial which would come off in the future, the trial of Smith versus the King. It didn't bear thinking of. He had refused to see a lawyer, refused to see anyone. Thank God, he had no near relatives to disgrace. His mother and father had died long ago and there were no brothers and sisters; only an uncle or two with whom he had obstinately refused to have anything to do. They hadn't understood him or appreciated his efforts at verse. That had been enough to condemn them at the time. Now he was chastened. He no longer believed his poetry to be the most important thing in the world, although it still held a high place. It was himself as a human being that was demanding his attention. And he prayed again for courage and strength to act the part of a man to the last—whatever that last might prove to be.

"A lady to see you, Mr. Smith," the voice of the warder interrupted his thoughts.

Robin heard light footsteps approaching.

"Ah, Lady Dorothy," he called cheerily without looking up. "Come in!"

"I'm sorry to disappoint you," returned a low, sweet voice which set every nerve in his body quivering. "But it's only me."

"Lady Gwendolen!" he exclaimed hoarsely. "You! Here! He drew his hands across his eyes. She bent over and took his other hand in both of hers.

"I had to come," she explained simply with a catch in the deep voice. "I wanted to tell you how brave you are and how I admire you."

Robin stood speechless and trembling slightly from shock.

"I know you are innocent, Mr. Smith. And I mean to prove it and save you."

"You! Save me!" interrupted Robin with a puzzled frown as if he couldn't quite grasp the purport of her words.

"Yes," she continued. "I'm going to make up for every thoughtless laugh and every..."

"You mustn't! You mustn't!" begged Robin in a husky voice. "I can't bear it!"

Lady Gwendolen was nonplussed for an instant. She had not expected such a change in the white hair over his right eye startled her. It made him look so mature. And there were lines in the face, lines of pain and grief. He seemed to have grown up since she last saw him. Dignity had replaced the awkwardness and bumptiousness she had known. He was moved by her visit as she had never been by her visit to him. He had never seen her moved except over his poems. "I've brought offerings, alone from Lady Dorothy, and her best love," Lady Gwendolen announced with a deliberate attempt to be cheerful. "You must open them and see..."

"They can wait..." Robin stared at his visitor as if she were a ghost. So often he had dreamed of her and now she was here! He didn't intend to waste any of the precious moments looking at Lady Dorothy's gifts.

"You really believe me innocent?" ... I thought everyone agreed with the jury..."

"Hasn't Lady Dorothy told you? Why, Inspector Linscott and everyone is on your side! They've gone to London today to..." She stopped in confusion. "Perhaps I oughtn't to say anything..."

Robin's first bewilderment had given way to such an overwhelming thankfulness that his eyes caught something of their old gleam and a new note of hope was discernible in his voice.

"Oh, I'm glad! Glad! I'd thought..." He stopped suddenly and looked questioning at Lady Gwendolen. "Er... I hope Mr. Flint is well," he said.

A flicker of a smile played about the full red lips as Lady Gwendolen replied gravely: "He is quite well. I heard from him this morning. We are the best of friends again, but we both decided that the engagement was a mistake."

"You're not going to marry him!" Robin couldn't have kept the exhilaration from his voice if he'd died for it.

"I'm not going to marry anyone..."

For quite two minutes the young couple stared at each other in silence then Lady Gwendolen rose from the single wooden chair on which she had been sitting.

"I must go now," she said huskily, holding out her hand.

Robin took it in his larger one and pressed it long, but he made no effort to keep her. It had all been so overwhelming, he wanted to be alone and get it straight. The engagement was broken; she was free! Free! And many people thought him innocent. She thought so! And there was hope that he soon would be free! Free! It was more than he could bear for very joy.

He watched the slim, black hatless figure as she walked down the narrow passage. Then he went over to his cot and threw himself down on his back, staring with sightless eyes at the low ceiling.

How long he lay there he did not afterwards remember. But quite suddenly he sprang up from his cot in a state of exultation he had never before experienced, and began to pace up and down the small cell, too small to allow his newborn energy full scope. Up and down, up and down, he paced the floor of his cell, like a caged lion suddenly awakened from his sleep and scenting free life outside.

It was as if Robin only now suddenly realized the full import of Lady Gwendolen's revelation. Before her he had forgotten everything, his poems, his confined life, the threat which hung over him. All these things had vanished before her. And nothing mattered but that she was there. And now, collecting his wits, he suddenly remembered. Three distinct things he remembered. One was the genuine deference she showed him; she believed in his innocence and admired his behavior. Next he remembered that she and Flint had parted company; this news alone, that she was free, was enough to make him deliciously happy. Last but not least, he remembered that they were making violent efforts on his behalf, that Inspector Linscott himself was working to set him free. A new wild hope fluttered in the poet's breast, and in his exultation—worth a hundred poems, he said to himself—he continued to pace his small cell, up and down, up and down...

CALF-PATH

a not-too-serious analogy

Speaking of wasteful methods of doing business, reminds us of Sam Fox's famous poem, "The Calf-Path." A few selected lines explain what we mean:

One day, through a primeval wood, A calf walked home as good calves should; And left a trail all bent askew, A crooked trail as all calves do.

And from that day, o'er hill and glade, Through these old woods a path was made; And many men wound in and out, And dodged, and turned, and bent about

And uttered words of righteous wrath Because 'twas such a crooked path

The years passed on in swift feet. The path became a village street; And this, before men were aware, A city's crowded thoroughfare. And men two centuries and a half Trod in the footsteps of that calf.

A hundred thousand men were led By one calf near three centuries dead... For this such reverence is lent To well-established precedent.

Excerpt from The Calf-Path by Sam. W. Fox

A.P. does not go it blind along the calf-paths followed by business men centuries ago. A.P. customers do not have to bear the expense of handling food by old-fashioned zig-zag methods. A.P.'s methods are the best money-saving methods of today.
